Tuesday, December 8, 2020

In This Issue
- What are we learning from the election results?
- In the News
- RESEARCH & DISCOVERY
- Mason Science Community
- Happening at Mason
- Events

What are we learning from the election results?

By Virginia Mason

The election is over. Will the anxiety be too?

(1) Turnout was historically high. In the end, voting for Joe Biden. This is not a good thing. But, this is a reflection of the United States for the last four years. It is a very close race. This means we all need to do our best to avoid disinformation, harassment, and violence. This is democracy at work.

(2) We all are taking a dose of patience and waiting for all votes to be counted. I know this is a lot to ask; however, it is important to make sure every vote is counted. This is the law of the land, and we need to abide by it. It is important to remember that the majority of people voted for their party, even if the results were not what they wanted. This is democracy at work.

(3) We were able to vote in a safe and healthy way. Even though there were some challenges, people were able to vote in a safe and healthy way. This is a reflection of the United States for the last four years. It is a very close race. This means we all need to do our best to avoid disinformation, harassment, and violence. This is democracy at work.

(4) Let me say this again: this is a very close race. This means we all have friends, family, neighbors, and co-workers, who voted differently than we did. We all need to do our best to respect that difference, be tolerant and constructive, build on it to become more agreeable going forward.

What are we learning from the election results?

By Virginia Mason

The election is over. Will the anxiety be too?

(1) Turnout was historically high. In the end, voting for Joe Biden. This is not a good thing. But, this is a reflection of the United States for the last four years. It is a very close race. This means we all need to do our best to avoid disinformation, harassment, and violence. This is democracy at work.

(2) We all are taking a dose of patience and waiting for all votes to be counted. I know this is a lot to ask; however, it is important to make sure every vote is counted. This is the law of the land, and we need to abide by it. It is important to remember that the majority of people voted for their party, even if the results were not what they wanted. This is democracy at work.

(3) We were able to vote in a safe and healthy way. Even though there were some challenges, people were able to vote in a safe and healthy way. This is a reflection of the United States for the last four years. It is a very close race. This means we all need to do our best to avoid disinformation, harassment, and violence. This is democracy at work.

(4) Let me say this again: this is a very close race. This means we all have friends, family, neighbors, and co-workers, who voted differently than we did. We all need to do our best to respect that difference, be tolerant and constructive, build on it to become more agreeable going forward.