Class at the Peabody - Exploring a Mock Excavation

Students learn how to read an archaeological site – Using a mock excavation of a local archaeological site, one that highlights Andover's historical status as a Native American trading center, students explore the various excavation units examining the material cutlure to determine what activity was taking place as well as what type of settlement the site was.

Thank you all for joining the Peabody Institute for another exciting year! This final newsletter of 2022 shares the Peabody's Annual Report, welcomes a new staff member, and tells the story of a recent trip to Bandolier National Monument. We wish you all a happy holiday season and healthy New Year!

• Friends of the Peabody are making a difference in their work with NAGPRA and repatriation. Starting January 1st, Jaime Arsenault is going to be the chairperson of the Smithsonian Repatriation Review Committee at NMAH. And the NAGPRA Review Committee is getting new members as well – we know Domonique DeBeaubien from the Seminole Tribe of Florida.

• Check out Brains On!, an award-winning science podcast for kids and curious adults from American Public Media. We recommend listening to one of their most recent episodes on mummification with a discussion on "responsible archaeology."
