A Day in Virtual Courthouse Proceedings

February 12, 2021 by Aishwerya Kansal

One day before an “appawing” virtual hearing went viral, IP Osgoode arranged and witnessed a smooth Federal Court virtual hearing via Zoom Business video conference. While many stories about the mishaps of virtual hearings and the challenges courts are facing have been making rounds during these unprecedented times, the courts have ensured access to justice by adapting to technological advances. Virtual hearings are not a new concept for arbitral proceedings, since these disputes are resolved internationally and have judges sitting globally. Nevertheless, Canada's transition for its traditional judicial system and domestic court rooms has been prudent to survive the ever-changing dynamics of this novel coronavirus and its new strains.

Trump-ing Donald's Campaign Music - Can Artists Control Who Gets to Play their Songs?

February 10, 2021 by Esther Kim

Last August, after pulling the public performance rights for his songs, Neil Young sued Donald Trump's campaign for copyright infringement when Young's music was used during a rally in Tulsa, Oklahoma without a licence. It appears that Young does not wish to be affiliated with Trump and does not want to create the impression that he supports Trump's behaviour or politics. Are there other ways for artists to control the use of their music?

Written by Esther Kim, Osgoode JD Candidate, enrolled in Professors D'Agostino and Vaver's 2020/2021 IP & Technology Law Intensive Program at Osgoode Hall Law School. As part of the course requirements, students were asked to write a blog on a topic of their choice.

Consultation on how to implement an extended general term of copyright protection in Canada

On 11 February 2021, the Canadian Government launched a public consultation on how to implement the extension to copyright terms under the Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA). The Act includes an amendment to the Copyright Act extending the term of a copyright from 50 years beyond the death of the author to 70 years. This change will come into effect on 31 December 2022. The Government is soliciting comments from the general public about the effects of these changes until 12 March 2021. You can read the Consultation Report and a quick Background on the Government of Canada Website.

IP Canada Report 2020

The Canadian Intellectual Property Office \(CIPO\) recently published the IP Canada Report 2020. In preparing this report, CIPO aims to provide an overview of Intellectual Property activity both in Canada and by Canadians abroad. Based on their findings, CIPO recognized that Canada's adoption of the Madrid Protocol and the Hague Agreement have helped to increase the growth of non-resident applications over the past decade. They hope that the findings in this report will help Canadian institutions in their economic recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic. Read CIPO's full report here.
