

April 2025

This month's newsletter brings events and celebrations. The Office of Undergraduate Research recognizes that research, knowledge dissemination and celebration is a vital aspect of creating a positive R1 research culture. We also recognize that many of our students are thinking about their futures.

We are so proud of our Undergraduate Research Leaders who serve as ambassadors for the Office. Ali Nopper who is our STEM specialist will join the ranks of colleague when she starts her doctoral program in chemistry at University of California-Santa Barbara. Sofia Flowers is going to make waves in healthcare as a registered nurse in the Salt Lake Valley. And Kishan Thambu will be in Germany doing research on software aimed to analyze movement of people with neurological disorders. He will be applying to medical school after his time abroad.

Seeing Through AI

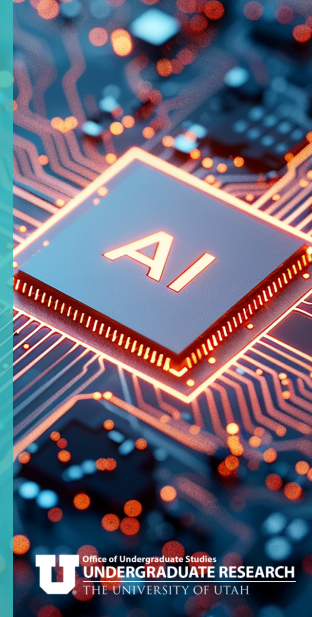

Dr. Shireen Elhabian
Associate Professor, School of Computing

APRIL 18
12:00–1:00 pm
Virtual

This presentation explores how computers "see" and understand images, from early traditional techniques to cutting-edge AI methods. Dive into how AI transforms image analysis by learning patterns directly from data, replacing the manual effort of designing features. This session highlights how AI advancements shape the way researchers interact with and make sense of the visual world around us.

Poster Prizes

This semester OUR was also able to award poster prizes because of our generous symposium bronze sponsors Maschoff Brennan and Northrup Grumman. Click here to see all the poster prize winners. Each of the prize winners will have a red ribbon on their poster during the symposium, receive a prize check, and have their poster displayed at the OUR Awards Ceremony on April 9 and in the Marriott Library Level 1 classroom hallway, adjacent to the library café starting in May. This high-traffic location will provide our diverse campus community with the opportunity to explore the impactful work of the University of Utah's top undergraduate scholars.

Math for All Conference

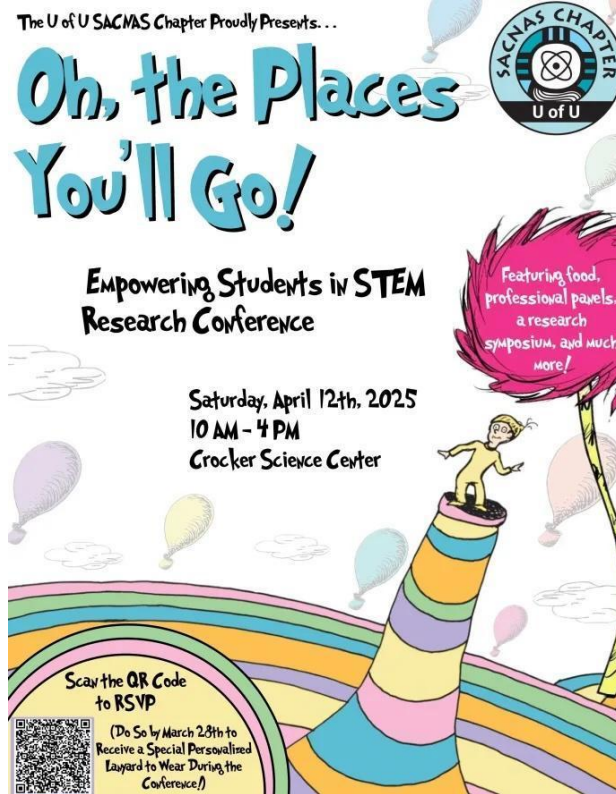

The Salt Lake City Math For All Conference strengthens the Utah mathematics community by holding talks and discussions in both research and education. The conference is geared towards undergraduate and graduate students, post-docs, and faculty members from all institutions in the Salt Lake City region. The goal of Math For All in SLC is to provide a friendly, open environment to learn and discuss mathematics. This a satellite conference from Math For All in New Orleans. Register by March 24 to attend the Math-for-All Conference on April 5.

Carnegie Community Engagement Showcase

The Carnegie Community Engagement Showcase is on Tuesday, April 9, from 5:30–6:30 PM in the College of Education. This event is one way for the University to showcase some of the most important and innovative community engagement work we've collected as part of the institution's 2025 reclassification process for the Carnegie Elective Classification for Community Engagement.
