FACULTY DIRECTOR MESSAGE

This virtual event is designed for the general public outside the Stanford community, questions can be directed to Melissa Mead, Associate Vice Provost for Environmental Health and Safety.

COMMUNITY PARTNERS HIGHLIGHTS

Roots

Roots and Stanford are exploring opportunities around the use of wearables to monitor health and expose the community to the potential of technology. Additionally, Roots and Stanford are coordinating efforts to get Roots patients tested through Stanford's drive-thru site in Emeryville.

OSW

OSW is providing meals to essential workers and frontline staff at high risk of exposure to coronavirus. They are also working with health insurers, health care provider associations, and state and local governments to support populations in need. OSW partners with housing providers, employers, health care facilities, and non-profits to cultivate resilience and wellbeing.

Valley Verde

Valley Verde is a food security organization based in San Jose. They are assisting struggling families who have been unable to earn income during this pandemic and don’t have access to food assistance. They also provide services to nearly 150 workers; the center continues to remain open to serve the community.

Veggielution

Veggielution is a non-profit organization serving the communities of East/South Bay, East Oakland, and San Jose. They are helping people to teach them the skills needed to grow their own food in a sustainable manner.

DAY WORKER CENTER

The Day Worker Center is a nonprofit organization serving the communities of Mountain View, Los Altos, and Sunnyvale. They are giving free hot breakfast and lunch six times a week to the day workers who aren’t able to earn income during this pandemic.
