The 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1791) provides states with powers not specifically granted to the federal government. It's a part of the Bill of Rights, the first ten amendments to the Constitution. It was written by James Madison as an answer to critics who wanted a strong national government. Madison feared that the federal government would become too powerful and that the states would lose control of their own affairs. The 10th Amendment was ratified in 1791.
