A Note From Parent to Parent...

Summer is flying by and I hope you are all enjoying the summer months. I just got back from a vacation to the beach and it was so refreshing. Haley was gone for a week with her sister so I was able to vacation with just her brothers. When we as parents are in the midst of it, I don't think we realize the extra effort we put in on a daily basis - and trying to vacation is even extra effort. This was not lost on me while I was gone on vacation with the boys. They packed their own bags, they hung out just the two of them, we had some one on one time together. It was really nice. I did miss Haley though.

I did notice some things while gone with other families vacationing. I noticed a family who took extra effort making their child comfortable at an activity we attended by having two adults readily available for their child, having noise canceling headphones, and letting the child gently pat them for stimming. Another family, I noticed the sibling helping with the youngster in a wheelchair and taking on that role naturally. This all made me think that parents do not get the recognition they deserve. Every day, they are taking extra care of their loved one with a disability and their families. The phrase "Real heroes don't wear capes" should include you parents and siblings because that is you. As parents, I don't think we recognize the heroes you are on a daily basis making this world a better place and your child's world better because of your special care.

LITTLE THEATRE OF WALLA WALLA'S
UPSTAGE TEENS PRESENTS:

King Arthur's Calamity

AUGUST 2023

“King Arthur’s Calamity” is an Upstage Teen production set in Camelot just before Arthur becomes king. The old queen would like to retire but she wants her successor to be worthy and good to her people and not, if you please, the very ambitious Earl of Nasty. Merlin the Magician is instructed to determine who shall be the new king. Of course, he brings forth the rock with a sword thrust into it. The person who can pull out the sword will be king. The Earl of Nasty tries and fails, but young Arthur, a page, easily extracts it. Then the Earl of Nasty locks Arthur in a dungeon but...it's just not that easy to fool Merlin! This production invites students to be involved at every level; actors, costumes, set, etc., while being guided by long-time Little Theatre volunteers.

The performance on August 4 is FREE and is for families who may not feel comfortable or be able to attend a live performance during a regularly scheduled show and runs about 1 hour long.
