"One of the main talking points when I went to talk with my representatives was to give examples as to why I've benefited and why other students will benefit from how they choose to fund science policy. It's important for the university to have money to give to students to do their research," Cleveland said.

"The university is giving me the freedom to do research and work with some of my grad students. This is the most important thing because now I can do what I want to do in my science career and really focus on my research. It's also important to me to be able to share this with my students," she added.

Cleveland's attendance was sponsored by the CASE program, which is funded by AAU institutions that supports academic inventions and the societal impact of university research.
