George Mason University law professor speaks with CCC students

On April 19, 2022, George Mason University School of Law professor Ira M. Kalb spoke with the Coastal Carolina University Psychology and Political Science classes. Dr. Kalb is an expert on the law of elections, and his talk focused on the 2020 U.S. election results and current political trends. He discussed the implications of the election outcomes and how they may affect future political elections. The students were engaged and asked many thoughtful questions about the topic. The talk was well-received by the students and provided valuable insights into the intersection of law and politics.
