

What are you doing to promote PEACE in your home, community, country or world?

Kenya

Joseph Muinde Musunza shared the following: I believe the key enabler of World Peace is Socio - economic stability. Simplicity, innovation and neutrality are the ingredients of change. I am passionate about clean environment and sustainable livelihoods. Matters climate change, food insecurity, water scarcity, illiteracy and limited access to quality health care are the impediments of quality livelihoods in developing countries.

With Globalization and today's ease of networking, I believe that we can stop domestic violence and child bullying in schools, we can save a life or stop war in DRC Congo, Somalia, Sudan or in Ukraine through simple messaging and spreading the gospel of peace and love.

The youth population in Africa should be encouraged to participate in leadership space. They should be ambassadors of peace. Nurturing youth's talents is an important yard stick towards tolerance, social cohesiveness, peace and sustainability.

Nigeria

Shared by a Peace Ambassador from Nigeria: "My name is Rackel Jackson Agara , I'm a youth peace activist in Nigeria. My motivation towards peace activism dates back to 2014, I was in my final year as a high school student, when the Chibok girls were abducted by the Boko Haram insurgents here in Nigeria, as we protested the #bring-back-our-girls campaign, I realized and felt the pain that violence had brought to our world. During my first year while pursuing my bachelors degree, I made my first attempt by advocating for peace education in my school environment, I discovered that most people do not even believe in the possibility of peace, while others have had this long lived hatred and strive towards an opposite religious or ethnic group; some see violence as the next best possible reaction to conflict.

On building peace in my local community here in Nigeria; I work towards the goal of reaching out to ten individuals a day (Goal: 10 people a day), over ten days I could reach one hundred people, engaging more and more people in the peace process. I formed a social media-based peace platform called the peace keeping forum on Facebook and WhatsApp using technology to educate the youths, children and individuals from different ethnic and religious groups."
