Students pay a textbook rental fee each semester as part of their tuition to support the general purpose of Textbook Rental Services, which is to provide textbooks.

Are you receiving Pell grants, financial aid, or work study funding? For students who are approved for these programs, you must apply for Student Support Services. To apply, go to the Student Support Services website and complete the application process.

The UW Placement test is available 24/7 for 180 days. Take the test from a desktop, laptop computer or mobile device using a valid UWL email address and a password that is unique to you (different from your current UWL login). Within 24 hours, you will get an email from your proctor informing you of your assigned academic advisor. This information will also be posted in your registration system. Prior to the start of the semester, each student will receive communication regarding their assigned academic advisor.

UWL Academic Advising Center & Career Services Office (Home to Resource Center) is there to serve student academic and career advising needs. Here is how our staff can support you –

1. Access to Career Services
2. Access to Student Life Resources
3. Access to Student Success Portal
4. Access to Grant Aid

Tips provided by: The Student Life Office: New Student and Family Programs will be sending you (new students and family members) this email newsletter every couple weeks throughout the summer and then monthly during your first year at UWL. This newsletter contains answers to questions we are most frequently asked. The newsletter is also available on our website.

Faculty and staff are excited about having students back! With masks, hand sanitizer, and other precautions, we are confident that we will be able to provide a safe environment for students to participate in their courses.

For OS classes, the class is all online but there will be times when virtual meetings are required. For courses to be held on campus, UWL will be prioritizing courses that have the most students. The types of materials you need for every class will depend on the educational goals of the class. However, it is possible that many of the courses you take in your first year will have content that is delivered online.

We know that it is true that first-year students are more likely to take. And, our faculty are excited to think about having students back on campus. UWL is working hard preparing for Fall 2020 and we are excited for our students to return.

A Message from the Provost

Welcome to your first edition of Eagle Mail! This regular occurring email newsletter contains answers to questions we are most frequently asked. The newsletter is also available on our website.

The Student Life Office: New Student and Family Programs will be sending you this email newsletter every couple weeks throughout the summer and then monthly during your first year at UWL. This newsletter contains answers to questions we are most frequently asked. The newsletter is also available on our website.

Remember: no one expects a new college student to have their career plans mapped out, so take advantage of campus staff, programs, and services, who can help you explore your interests and develop the skills and knowledge you need.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.

Visit your career advisor early and often. Identify and start to develop the contacts with professionals doing jobs you hope to have one day. As you progress through college, look for employers who share your passions and interests. These organizations will provide you with valuable insights and experiences to inform your decision-making.

Remember: career planning is an ongoing process, and your career path will likely change as you gain more knowledge and experience. As you begin your time at UWL, start exploring some of the lesser-known majors and careers that might be a good fit for you. Many students change majors during their first year, and that is OK. Spend time during your first year planning for your future.