Within the U.S., each state has designated official symbols that represent the cultural heritage and natural treasures of that state. There are state flags and state beverages, but we would like to focus on state wildlife symbols that can be found within Tennessee! This month’s edition will focus on state birds and butterflies.

The Zebra Swallowtail, Eurytides marcellus, was designated as Tennessee’s official butterfly in 1982. It got its name because the black and white stripes on its lower back resemble the appearance of a zebra. The swallowtail grows in length with red and blue spots on its wings. The swallowtail insect has black and white stripes that run in an oblique fashion from the tip of its wings to its lower back. The swallowtail grows in length with red and blue spots on its wings.
