Dear Friends,

In one of the country's indigenous languages, "Guyana" translates to "land of many waters." And where there is water, there are fish. Serious freshwater anglers have long been aware of the tremendous opportunities for fishing adventures in Guyana. Arrowana, piranha and peacock bass populate the rivers, as does the world's largest scaled freshwater fish, the arapaima, primarily done through catch and release fly fishing. Of course, the fish themselves are just part of the attraction. Rivers run through pristine rainforests, brimming with wildlife and exotic birds. Indigenous communities welcome anglers and provide warm hospitality and experienced, English-speaking guides. I invite you to read on and discover the tremendous opportunities Guyana can provide your fishing-focused clients.

Fish on!

PERSON OF THE MONTH: RAYMOND JAMES

Raymond has worked as a boat captain and fishing guide for Adventure Guianas and Piraiba Lodge for eight years, but he's been on the Essequibo River much longer than that. The 42-year-old father of four is a Makushi, one of the nine groups of Indigenous Peoples that inhabit Guyana. He grew up swimming, exploring and fishing the Essequibo, and has an exhaustive knowledge of the river. He enjoys his work and delights in helping visiting anglers turn their dreams into reality.

LANDING A BIG ONE IN GUYANA

With such a robust landscape of rivers and forests, it's not surprising that Guyana is one of the world's best places for freshwater fishing. There are close to 900 species of fish here, many of them on the bucket list of avid anglers, including the world's largest scaled freshwater fish, the arapaima.

These freshwater beasts can reach weights up to 700 pounds, and grow to over ten feet in length. In Guyana, most arapaima that are caught on the fly weigh between 100 and 200 pounds and average six to seven feet in length. Arapaima fishing here is strictly catch-and-release, but you'll never forget the thrill of reeling in one of these river monsters.

Other species you can fish for include payara, pacu, arowana, himara, golden dorado, piraiba/lau lau, a variety of catfish and several species of bass, including the peacock bass, a notoriously challenging game fish.

Primetime for a Guyana fishing adventure is November through January. And while February to May isn't ideal, an experienced guide will still be able to find some good places along the rivers.

With regards to accommodations, nature resorts, eco-lodges and community-run accommodation in villages close to rivers are the best choices for anglers. Un-fussy but comfortable, they're perfect for recuperating after a long day on the river. Here they can relax, enjoy local food and get an insight into traditional indigenous cultures and their ways of life. Some of the options to consider are Karanambu Lodge; Surama Eco-Lodge along the Burro Burro River; Rewa Eco-Lodge, the community-run accommodation at the confluence of the Rupununi and Rewa Rivers; and the Arrowpoint Nature Resort closer to the coast.

All of these (and other) lodges are accustomed to accommodating anglers and provide local indigenous guides with an in-depth knowledge of the rivers, the fish and the best spots for catching them. They can also provide the necessary fishing equipment.

The opportunities for freshwater fishing in Guyana are vast and varied, so whether you or your clients are expert anglers seeking a new challenge, or a beginner looking to give it a try, they'll find the fishing experience that's right for them.

VIDEO OF THE MONTH

The title of this video from Angler West TV pretty much says it all, "Extreme Freshwater Fishing:

Guyana Jungle Giants." The video is a bit long and gets technical at a few points (serious anglers will appreciate that), but if you want to see what it's like to reel in a massive arapaima, it is worth the watch. You'll also get to see plenty of other freshwater fish getting caught on the upper Essequibo River, including peacock bass, catfish and piranha. The crew even gets a wakeup call from some nearby howler monkeys, which is...well...a unique experience. Watch the video below.
