On the Cover

Stuart Travis Mural before installation at the Peabody, 1938.

The central staircase of the Peabody includes a mural titled "Culture Areas of North America" by Stuart Travis (1868-1942). Travis was an accomplished and prolific American artist, illustrator, and designer who studied at the Académie Julian in Paris. This mural is one of three large murals painted by Travis that are still displayed on Phillips Academy's campus.

MARIA TAYLOR
CURATOR OF COLLECTIONS

This month's blogs explore the idea of change and re-examining the past. First, reflecting upon personal experiences to re-examine classroom learning. Second, discussing intergenerational trauma through the lens of a Disney film. And finally, highlighting repurposed drawers from the Peabody's old collections storge. I learned something from each of these and I hope that you do too!

NAGPRA, Repatriation, and Relearning History

Contributed by Ryan Wheeler

This blog is an email response by Peabody Director, Ryan Wheeler, to a follow-up question from a journalist writing a piece about Seminole Tribe of Florida efforts to get the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of Natural History to repatriate ancestors being held there. Read on to learn more!
