People moving to a new area need a safe and easy way to connect with fellow newcomers. Sports are a great way to bring people together. Two students, Kate Hinds '22 and Delaney Koed '22, and their friend Sean Espinosa '22 have created a solution called Squad Sport.

Sports have always been a way to make friends. All you have to do is stand up in a corner and say, "Hi there, I'm new here." That's how Squad Sport founder Kate Hinds found her tribe. Kate's love for sports started at a young age. At 10 years old, she began a new sport: track. She loved it. It became her passion and something she was very good at. But when Kate moved away from home, she faced the challenge of finding her place in a new community. She missed the support and camaraderie she had with her teammates. Kate knew she wasn't the only one who struggled to find their place in a new community. She worked with her friend Delaney Koed '22 and Sean Espinosa '22 to create Squad Sport, a platform designed to help people feel welcome in their new communities.

Squad Sport allows users to safely connect with and meet people in the same area based on their shared interest in a particular sport. By connecting people through a shared love of sports, Squad Sport helps address the problem of finding community in a new area.

Plan Organise

Scheduling is a nightmare for working parents. On the daily, they have to maintain and manage their work schedules, their children's school schedules, after-school activities, and make new friends?

Moving to a new city can be daunting and lonely, especially if you don't know anyone. It is normal to worry:
