Asking "Isaac Pewton" to Innovate Out of a Crisis

February 17, 2021 by Prof Pina D'Agostino

This article originally appeared in The Hill Times, issue dated February 17, 2021.

With Canadians' mounting frustration and the dwindling prospects of exiting this pandemic any time soon, it is vital that we unite as a nation to innovate. How Canada continues to respond to the pandemic will also define how we respond to future global challenges. Leading the development of new vaccines, more effective personal protective equipment, and new and improved systems of distribution and administration of the vaccine are just some instances of what is necessary now. This pandemic has highlighted our societal inequalities and our fractured innovative landscape.

The university, one of Canada's cradles of innovation, must continue to innovate out of this crisis and future crises. With innovation more critical than ever, how do we increase collaboration, coordination, and access to salient data and information during prolonged isolation?

Prof Giuseppina D'Agostino is a senior fellow with CIGI's International Law Research Program (ILRP), effective November 2016. She is the Founder & Director of IP Osgoode, the IP Intensive Program, and the Innovation Clinic, the Editor-in-Chief for the IPilogue and the Intellectual Property Journal, and an Associate Professor at Osgoode Hall Law School.

Of Bands and Breweries: The Hip Sues Mill Street Over “100th Meridian” Beer

February 19, 2021 by Emily Xiang & Alessia Monastero

The hundredth meridian is the longitudinal line that roughly separates the semi-arid, and rural regions of Western Canada from the humid, and more urban regions of the Central and Atlantic provinces. But for many, the term was first brought to life by the beloved Canadian rock band, The Tragically Hip.

On February 9, 2021, The Tragically Hip filed a Statement of Claim against Mill Street Brewery over the Toronto-based brewery’s “100th Meridian Amber Lager”. The band released its hit single “At the Hundredth Meridian” in 1992, which currently has nearly 3.5 million views on YouTube on its official music video alone. The Tragically Hip claims that Mill Street Brewery has engaged in a course of conduct to “ride on the coat tails of one of the most beloved bands in Canadian music history by marketing its beer with reference to The Tragically Hip and one of its many quintessentially Canadian chart-topping tracks”.

Facial Recognition: Are We Ready for It?

February 18, 2021 by Saumia Ganeshamoorthy

A few years ago, facial recognition technology seemed foreign to the average citizen. Today, the ever-popular Apple iPhone uses facial recognition technology to unlock its newest models.

With facial recognition right at our fingertips, where else should we expect to see it? Tamir Israel, a staff lawyer at CIPPIC (the Samuelson-Glushko Canadian Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic at the University of Ottawa), spoke more on this subject on Michael Geist's recent LawBytes podcast episode. Their conversation touched on the pushes toward, pulls away from, and perils of using facial recognition technology at the national border.

Written by Saumia Ganeshamoorthy, a second-year JD candidate at Osgoode Hall Law School and a contributing IPilogue editor.

Tripping over TRIPS

On February 11, the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives featured an article by Osgoode's own Lucinda Chitapain on their blog, Behind the Numbers. The article looks at India and South Africa's proposal to the WTO to temporarily suspend TRIPS provisions which would allow countries to grant or enforce IP rights to COVID-19 vaccines and related medical equipment. Many global leaders, including countries like Canada and the United States whose governments have ties to the pharmaceutical industry, believe that the legislation already has enough flexibility and accordingly have withheld their support. The article will be published in the CCPA's March/April edition of The Monitor magazine, and you can read Ms. Chitapain's full article here.
