LSU is known

around the world for its research prestige. Our faculty are among the most respected in their fields, and have contributed broadly to society through discoveries ranging from advances in treating chronic disease to saving our fragile coastal ecosystems -- and everything in between. Research done at LSU even contributed to the 2017 Nobel Prize in Physics.

But it doesn't stop there – our students get the chance to engage in hands-on, real-life research while studying at LSU.

Undergraduate research provides your Tiger with a true leg up in the world. Even if they're not planning to pursue graduate studies, participating in research helps to improve problem-solving and critical thinking – skills that make an applicant stand out in a crowded job market.

There are a number of ways your Tiger can take the plunge and get involved, starting with finding a potential faculty or student mentor in our database. LSU's undergraduate research program, LSU Discover, also hosts a series of workshops that your Tiger can attend to sharpen their skills. And if your student is already engaged in research, ask them to sign up as an LSU Research Ambassador to help motivate other students to join in the fun.

This type of engagement is one more way for your Tiger to make the most of their LSU education. Please encourage them to take the extra step – it will pay them back in dividends.

As always, thank you for trusting us with your Tiger.

Sincerely,
F. King Alexander
LSU President
