Emery's Progress

By Kristina Rasmussen

When social distancing started in March, I had significant anxiety for my son Emery. He has bipolar disorder and autism. My husband Mike and I, the Walla Walla school district teachers, therapists, and medical professionals have worked hard to support him so he can live to his fullest potential.

A Note from Parent to Parent

Seasons Greeting Families! 'Tis the season to be jolly. I love Christmas time with the lights and decorations, anticipation, and excitement from the kids. But it can also be a time of pressure, depression, and a feeling of utter overwhelm. This year especially it is important for you to take a step back and slow down a bit. Remember that the kids will enjoy the memories made more than what is under the tree. Take a drive to look at lights around town, walk downtown in the evening with Heritage Park decorated by the City, play board games, watch the feel good Christmas movies, but most important take time to breathe, to have a good cry if you need to. Reach out to a friend, or Parent to Parent staff, ask for help. You are not alone! We are here for you and no feeling or problem is too big to solve with a little help from your Parent to Parent family.

New Addition to our Website!

We have added a list of children's books (divided by reading level from easy reader to young adult) that feature characters with disabilities. This new section can be found under the Resources Tab, in the Education Section. It is by no means an exhaustive list, just a starting point to begin exploring.
