In the midst of the pandemic, we have found new ways to partner with community organizations to, for example, transcribe documents, interview seniors and veterans, and record oral histories. We have been working with faculty across GW to support their efforts to continue community-engaged learning experiences. One example, is described in the GW Today article on the Nashman Center’s engagement with Corcoran alumni and local teaching artists to more than double the number of students served during the pandemic. In the midst of the national uprisings, we have redoubled our efforts to fight anti-Blackness and systemic racism by engaging students in discussions and events about racial injustice, and in support of our partners, favoring instead opportunities for students to use and develop their academic and civic skills, and build their future relationships, we recognize that a) such relationships can be built through fundraising, and b) the needs in many of our communities are dire and immediate and donations of money or goods may be needed in the short term.

We have spent our summer working to stay in touch to meet the urgent needs of our students, faculty, and staff, and to continue to connect GW to the community, we have worked with community partners to support community-organized community organizing campaigns, and have worked to support student and faculty-organized campaigns to support voter registration and support voting rights. In the midst of political chaos in our country, we have focused our efforts on nonpartisan efforts to drive voter participation among our students. GW Votes, a nonpartisan coalition of faculty, staff, and students encourages everyone to register and to vote. Anyone can use this station to register, find out where to vote, or get your absentee ballot.

In the midst of political chaos in our country, we have focused our efforts on nonpartisan efforts to drive voter participation among our students. GW Votes, a nonpartisan coalition of faculty, staff, and students encourages everyone to register and to vote. Anyone can use this station to register, find out where to vote, or get your absentee ballot.

In the midst of the pandemic, we have worked with faculty and students to support their efforts to continue community-engaged learning experiences. One example, is described in the GW Today article on the Nashman Center’s engagement with Corcoran alumni and local teaching artists to more than double the number of students served during the pandemic. In the midst of the national uprisings, we have redoubled our efforts to fight anti-Blackness and systemic racism by engaging students in discussions and events about racial injustice, and in support of our partners, favoring instead opportunities for students to use and develop their academic and civic skills, and build their future relationships, we recognize that a) such relationships can be built through fundraising, and b) the needs in many of our communities are dire and immediate and donations of money or goods may be needed in the short term.

We have spent our summer working to stay in touch to meet the urgent needs of our students, faculty, and staff, and to continue to connect GW to the community, we have worked with community partners to support community-organized community organizing campaigns, and have worked to support student and faculty-organized campaigns to support voter registration and support voting rights. In the midst of political chaos in our country, we have focused our efforts on nonpartisan efforts to drive voter participation among our students. GW Votes, a nonpartisan coalition of faculty, staff, and students encourages everyone to register and to vote. Anyone can use this station to register, find out where to vote, or get your absentee ballot.

In the midst of the pandemic, we have worked with faculty and students to support their efforts to continue community-engaged learning experiences. One example, is described in the GW Today article on the Nashman Center’s engagement with Corcoran alumni and local teaching artists to more than double the number of students served during the pandemic. In the midst of the national uprisings, we have redoubled our efforts to fight anti-Blackness and systemic racism by engaging students in discussions and events about racial injustice, and in support of our partners, favoring instead opportunities for students to use and develop their academic and civic skills, and build their future relationships, we recognize that a) such relationships can be built through fundraising, and b) the needs in many of our communities are dire and immediate and donations of money or goods may be needed in the short term.

We have spent our summer working to stay in touch to meet the urgent needs of our students, faculty, and staff, and to continue to connect GW to the community, we have worked with community partners to support community-organized community organizing campaigns, and have worked to support student and faculty-organized campaigns to support voter registration and support voting rights. In the midst of political chaos in our country, we have focused our efforts on nonpartisan efforts to drive voter participation among our students. GW Votes, a nonpartisan coalition of faculty, staff, and students encourages everyone to register and to vote. Anyone can use this station to register, find out where to vote, or get your absentee ballot.

In the midst of the pandemic, we have worked with faculty and students to support their efforts to continue community-engaged learning experiences. One example, is described in the GW Today article on the Nashman Center’s engagement with Corcoran alumni and local teaching artists to more than double the number of students served during the pandemic. In the midst of the national uprisings, we have redoubled our efforts to fight anti-Blackness and systemic racism by engaging students in discussions and events about racial injustice, and in support of our partners, favoring instead opportunities for students to use and develop their academic and civic skills, and build their future relationships, we recognize that a) such relationships can be built through fundraising, and b) the needs in many of our communities are dire and immediate and donations of money or goods may be needed in the short term.

We have spent our summer working to stay in touch to meet the urgent needs of our students, faculty, and staff, and to continue to connect GW to the community, we have worked with community partners to support community-organized community organizing campaigns, and have worked to support student and faculty-organized campaigns to support voter registration and support voting rights. In the midst of political chaos in our country, we have focused our efforts on nonpartisan efforts to drive voter participation among our students. GW Votes, a nonpartisan coalition of faculty, staff, and students encourages everyone to register and to vote. Anyone can use this station to register, find out where to vote, or get your absentee ballot.