Dear Jumbo Community,

When was the last time someone held space and listened to you? How about a time when you deeply listened to another? What resulted from these moments? Earlier this month at our annual Association of Chaplains and Spiritual Life in Higher Education conference, a profound experience unfolded. During a cultural identity session, an elder within our Black Chaplains group spoke about passing the torch to the next generation. The assembled body not only honored the elders, but also actively responded by recognizing their individual and collective responsibilities.

This powerful encounter led me to contemplate the effects of listening and its diverse forms. In these tumultuous and divisive times, even common phrases like "lending an empathetic ear," "having a critical ear," or "active listening" take on renewed significance. Listening is not just a skill, but a deliberate practice of understanding, reflecting, and preparing for hopefully sustained and meaningful dialogue.

I was recently in Houston, Texas and gave a talk to a secular community entitled: Unmasking the Human (Un)Condition: How Deep Listening Reveals Our Shared Humanity. I spoke about the masks, or the performative qualities of our lives that are influenced by social and cultural contexts. I proposed that by engaging in moments of "resonant listening" that we can better confront what afflicts us. In wading in the often difficult realities of the world together, we can open new orientations to relationship-building, where we might upend the pervasive imaginary of possessive individualism and separation and move towards a more interdependent model for collective flourishing.

As a Chaplain going into various spaces, I find there is a need to pay attention to our identities and our emotions. This requires perhaps an uncomfortable practice of suspending immediate judgment and allowing curiosity to lead the way. In conversation, a mutual recognition of our multiple truths and differences can be a source for change.
My invitation for our community is to hold space for complexity and to notice when we are present with another. In the coming week, several opportunities for doing just that. Please explore this e-news and see what sparks your interest. What possibilities are available for deeper resonance and embodied connection?

En conjunto,

Anthony Cruz Pantojas

2024 Haley House Summer Residency
Apply by March 1

The Haley House Live-In Community is now accepting applications for the 2024 Summer Residency at Haley House! Haley House uses food with purpose and the power of community to break down barriers between people, empower individuals, and strengthen neighborhoods. We believe in radical solutions: solving problems at their root by challenging attitudes that perpetuate suffering and building alternative models. Founded as a “house of hospitality” in 1966, Haley House has grown into a multifaceted organization deeply rooted in the South End and Roxbury. The summer residency is a 3-month-long program where residents help manage the day-to-day operations of the Haley House soup kitchen while participating in community life with the Haley House Live-in Community. Residents are asked to commit to 20 hours per week in exchange for housing and food. The Live-in Community is a core piece of Haley House, where residents live in an intentional community upstairs while running the soup kitchen and food pantry on the first floor, all at 23 Dartmouth St. The deadline for applications is 3/1/24 and if you have any questions, contact our email. Apply here.

The fellowship is hosted by the Native Land Conservancy (NLC), the first Native-led land conservation non-profit east of the Mississippi. Our mission is to preserve healthy landscapes for all living beings and restore land wherever possible. Our all-Indigenous board of directors come from four local tribal groups. We draw upon our collective traditional cultural knowledge with generations of direct experience in the woodlands, coastlines, and waterways of our homelands. The fellowship intends to open up pathways to diverse careers in conservation for rising Native Americans. Whether you’re a student of ecology or considering a career switch, you’re in the right place! We believe that it is in all our best interests when the next generation of Indigenous conservationists are encouraged to bring their whole selves to their training, including their culture.
