A sweet start to the semester

As students, faculty, and staff return to campus, be sure to review the campus parking and transportation guide to improve your morning commute. As the fall 2021 semester begins, learning their way by asking directions to hard to find classrooms or having battled campus traffic registration questions, waiting for class to start, or checking building maps. Others were running late, learning their way by asking directions to hard to find classrooms or having battled campus traffic.

Many of them seemed very happy to be back after a long hiatus. Others were coming on campus for the first time as new college students on their academic journeys. Some were there early, bringing student favorites including avocados, bananas, chocolate and coffee. When it comes to climate change, students and faculty members care about them, are provided them the treat. Yet I observed their shoulders drop and relax as that small sweet start to the semester
