Cynthia Brown-Long

Tennessee Governor Bill Haslam commuted Brown-Long's original sentence to 15 years, and she was released from prison in 2012. Her release was preceded by an outpouring of support and sparked a national debate about child trafficking and the juvenile justice system. In the years since her release, Cyntoia has worked extensively in Tennessee with several organizations including the Tennessee Justice Project, the Nashville Women's Network, and the National Center on Sexual Exploitation. Cyntoia has also sent a letter to the Tennessee State Senate, expressing her interest in promoting gender equality with particular emphasis on ending sexual exploitation and trafficking.
