As Tufts community members, we are always each other's. Today, I hold that close, and look forward to moving in those who came before them. We carry on with the work of becoming anti-racist interfaith leaders in and that we are each other's magnitude and bond.

Recently I have been inspired by the poem entitled "We are not the same," by Brenda Perlin. The poem invites us to consider how our identities and lives are intertwined, and how the experiences of one person shape the experiences of another. I hope that its musical refrain that "we are each other's" will keep moving us forward in solidarity and hope during this tumultuous time.

Lately I have been inspired by the poem entitled "We are not the same," by Brenda Perlin. The poem invites us to consider how our identities and lives are intertwined, and how the experiences of one person shape the experiences of another. I hope that its musical refrain that "we are each other's" will keep moving us forward in solidarity and hope during this tumultuous time.