On the Cover
Working with Rachel Son, Stephanie Cormier, Jennifer Villanueva, and the maritime archaeology field school students in the dig program cycle of a 19th-century Long Island ship, the Peabody has launched a course catalog. The course catalog serves as a platform for reaching the diverse student body, educators, and professionals interested in the Peabody's mission: the exploration and protection of the cultural heritage of the region. This year, the Peabody is offering courses in maritime archaeology, a field that is rapidly growing in popularity. The course catalog includes offerings for both on-campus and online courses, providing a flexible learning environment for students. The Peabody is committed to providing high-quality education in the field of archaeology and is excited to offer these courses to the public.

Reclaiming the Ancestors: Indigenous and Black Perspectives on Repatriation, Human Rights, and Justice
September 2, 2020 at 4:00 PM EDT
Register below for this online event

What does it mean to turn human beings into artifacts? What happens to the living communities who lose control and ownership over their own ancestors and heritage? In exploring these questions, this panel will discuss how repatriation—the process of reclaiming and returning ancestral and human remains—can address inequality.
