BLACK HISTORY MONTH

— February 2023 —

Cardiac Conditions in Obstetrical Care

Did you Know?

Until the late 19th century, the majority of births were attended by midwives, many of whom were Black, indigenous, or immigrant women.

February Events

Black History Month

We celebrate Black mothers and families and honor the contributions of Black clinicians, advocates, legislators, and community members who have tirelessly worked to combat inequalities leading to death and harm to Black mothers and families. TIPQC stands with these leaders and communities and commit to combating structural racism in maternal healthcare to make birth safer, improve maternal health outcomes and save lives.

American Heart Month

February is American Heart Month. As an AIM state, we are proud to address one of the drivers of maternal mortality and severe maternal morbidity through the development of the Cardiac Conditions in Obstetrical Care Patient Safety Bundle.

Rare Disease Day

For those born with rare diseases, early diagnosis can save lives. Read one family's story that raises awareness about the critical need for early diagnosis to support efficient care for those with #rarediseases.

Articles and Opportunities

HRSA is seeking input from the public on topics related to the design, implementation, and evaluation of the Healthy Start program by February 3!

Large study confirms COVID risk to pregnant people, infants...

Getting COVID while pregnant raises the risk of death more than sevenfold compared to a pregnancy without infection, according to a new analysis in BMJ Global Health.

Read Healthy Equity and Maternal Health to learn more about significant disparities by patient race, ethnicity, and insurance type.

RECAP

With gratitude and thanks TIPQC honors Tennessee's past Commissioner of Health, Morgan McDonald, MD, for her tireless efforts to improve health for all Tennesseans and her commitment and advocacy for moms and babies. Dr. McDonald has served on the TIPQC Board for the last 8 years.

We will miss you!
