The Ethnographic Research Collection complements the archaeological collections and is used extensively in support of the museum's teaching mission. The North American Indian basketry collection includes 350 pieces representing groups from every major culture area and ranging in date from the early 19th century to the present. This image is one section of a Huron birch bark tray basket from Quebec, Canada. The birch bark is embellished with pictures of figures smoking pipes, embroidered in moose hair.

The Peabody is pleased to kick off the new year with the digital publication of our annual report. And if our partnerships and outreach this month are anything to go by, 2022 will be an amazing year for us!
