The change of seasons is full of possibilities for us. As our bodies adapt, our senses heighten to move and visualize, and we notice the early setting sun and the dimming down of our energy. However, opportunities for visibility and reflection from our part are a must. In the upcoming weeks, Tufts communities and beyond will be celebrating the winter solstice. The winter solstice holds an important place for human beings because it serves as an indication of longer nights and the beginning of winter.

As a winter solstice baby born in La Isla del Encanto / Island of Enchantment, Puerto Rico, The concepts of light and enchantment have a very personal meaning in my life. For example, growing up I recall parrandas, eating tembleque, and gathering with neighbors who would open their houses to share in celebration during the winter season.

The Humanist Community at Tufts is preparing to celebrate the winter solstice this upcoming Friday by sharing food, lighting candles, recasting our visions, dreams, and uncertainties as a community.

Today, I invite you to consider the generations of peoples and even non-human sentient beings who have learned and adapted throughout time in order to not only survive but thrive as they experience the winter solstice. May you reflect, discover, and embrace the many processes of change.
