Vanderbilt adds volleyball as a varsity sport

Chancellor Daniel Diermeier and the Faculty Senate will celebrate Vanderbilt's faculty by presenting many of the university's highest recognitions.

The Staff Women's Advancement and Equity Council is seeking commitments from local AAPI leaders to join a pre-event panel discussion on May 23.

The Student Care Network has launched the Social Justice CARE website.

Applications are open through June 15 for the Neurodiversity graduate trainee program now accepting applications.

Emilie M. Townes, who has led the reenvisioning of theological education at Vanderbilt, will be installed as the Divinity School’s 16th dean in 2023.

Though the pandemic has illuminated that AAPIs still struggle with being seen, even, to my graduate school days of sifting through archives for any trace of the names of contributions from the Amy Tans, Larry Itliongs and Yuri Kochiyamas of our heritage.

Unfortunately, my story isn't uncommon. Every time I give workshops at AAPI Heritage Month celebrations, I'm surprised by how many people respond to my story of being denied access to service from salons.

I'm a Filippina immigrant, in her instruction to stop speaking Tagalog and to pick up American, I dutifully followed my mom, a woman from the Philippines and immigrated to the United States.

If I wanted to be successful as an “American,” I dutifully followed my mom, a woman from the Philippines and immigrated to the United States.