Produce, Consume, Discard | artist statement

Produce, Consume, Discard represents the dynamic relationship between the consumption that commodity obsessed culture imposes and forms articulated with a specific material that has served its intended purpose. T-shirts are strong, durable, and relatively inexpensive, making them a popular choice for consumers. Using the deconstructed t-shirt remnants, I create work that draws the viewer to consider the original process involved in knitting the shirt. Although these t-shirts may have all started out as the same color, they now bare evidence of being worn, stained, washed, and discarded. Engrained within the used fabric is a history that speaks of its previous owner. My intention is for the viewer to consider the processes and efforts that have gone into the installation to provide a similar context for the production of their own belongings.

About the artist

Sarah Kolar is an artist living and working in Omaha, Nebraska. She received her Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls, Iowa in 2010. She completed her Master of Fine Arts degree for Sculpture + Expanded Practices at Ohio University in Athens, Ohio in 2015. Kolar returned to Omaha in 2016 and exhibited Presence of Labor at the Wanda D. Ewing Gallery. Most recently, she exhibited Under It / Over It, an installation at Project Project Gallery in April 2019.

Kolar is a fiber artist that utilizes everyday textiles to create artwork. In her recent installations, using deconstructed t-shirt remnants, she crochets the pieces together to resemble the original process involved in knitting a shirt. Through these processes and materials, she investigates notions of labor.
