Peabody Newsletter NOVEMBER 2021

On the Cover

Lalá [Grandfather] by Jonny Yates, 2020
Lakota
Wood and paper

Jonny Yates (aka Jonny White Bull) is a member of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and lives in McLaughlin, SD. Jonny is a talented jewelry maker, stylist, and chef. Jonny is the consummate "maker," who loves creating carved and painted bone jewelry, drawings, and three dimensional pieces made from cardboard, milk jugs, and other found materials. This piece is titled lalá, or grandfather, in the Lakota language, a reference to Jonny's ancestor Sitting Bull, who is depicted here. Jonny invites everyone to spin his kinetic artwork and reflect on your own ancestors. Find this piece at the Peabody and learn more here.

We hope you enjoy this month's news from the Peabody! This edition features important updates to our collections research and access policies, as well as open nominations for the Society for American Archaeology's Peabody and Binford awards, and Warren Moorehead's battle with tuberculosis. Look for more news next time as we recap the Phillips Academy fall term and share more fascinating details from our past!

Research Requires Consultation

Contributed by Marla Taylor

The way the Peabody Institute is supporting collections-based research is changing. As of November 2021, consultation with an authorized tribal representative is a required part of any application for access to collections. Read on to learn more!
