January 2021

Criminal Justice Month

In the month of January, the Public Opinion Research Institute (PORI) at George Mason University is partnering with the American University Crime, Justice, and Society Program (CJS) to conduct a survey on public opinion about crime and criminal justice in the United States.

The survey will be conducted by a team of graduate and undergraduate students from both institutions. The survey questions will focus on attitudes towards crime prevention, justice system effectiveness, and perspectives on crime policies.

The survey will be available online from January 1st to January 31st, 2021. Participants will be able to complete the survey in English or Spanish.

The results of the survey will be made available to the public on the PORI website and will be used to inform discussions on crime and justice policies.

If you would like to participate in the survey, please visit the PORI website and follow the instructions to complete it.

Thank you for your support of research on crime and justice in the United States.
